JUDGE SHARSWOOD ON LEGAL TENDERS.

Extract from His Opinion in the Case of Horie vs. Trott.

"On the whole then I am of opinion that the provision of the act of Congress of February 25th, 1862, declaring the notes issued in pursuance of that act to be lawful money, and a legal tender, is UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

"This renders it unnecessary that I should consider the other question which has been made, as to the effect of the special agreement to pay in lawful silver money of the United States. I am in favor of entering judgment for the plaintiff, but as a majority of the court are of a different opinion, judgment for the defendant."—Extract from the Philadelphia Age of 27th of February 1867, where the opinion is published in full.

It may also be found in the Legal Intelligencer of March 15, 1867, page 92.

In the same copy of the Age is a carefully prepared eulogy of the Judge and this opinion, in which is the following:

"Judge Sharswood reasons upon and decides the case as if he were some lofty spirit sitting far above and out of the contentions and strife of the world."

Will not the holders of greenbacks and Government bonds consider the Judge as quite too elevated and ethereal for such earthly honors as a seat on the Supreme Bench?

A Prophetic Dream.

In the "Diary and Letters of Sarah Pierpont," who married Jonathan Edwards, the celebrated theologian, now published in Hours at Home, occurs the following letter describing a singular prophetic dream relative to the celebrated Aaron Burr, who was a grandson of Mrs. Edwards.

STOCKBRIDGE, May 10, 1756.

DEAR BROTHER JAMES—Your letters always do us good, and your last one was one of your best. Have you heard of the birth of Esther's second child at Newark? It was born on the sixth of February last, and its parents have named him Aaron Burr, Jr., after his father, the worthy President of the College. I trust the little immortal will grow up to be a good and useful man. But somehow, a strange presentiment of evil has hung over my mind of late, and I can hardly rid myself of the impression that the child was born to see trouble. You know I don't believe in dreams and visions, but lately I had a sad night of broken sleep, in which the future career of that boy seemed to pass before me. He first appeared as a little child just beginning to ascend a high hill. Not long after he set out, the two guides who started with him, disappeared, one after the other. He went on alone, and as the road was open and plain, and as friends met him at every turn he got along very well. At times he took on the air and bearing of a soldier, and then of a statesman, assuming to lead and control others. As he neared the top of the hill, the way grew more steep and difficult, and his companions became alienated from him, refusing to help him or be led by him. Baffled in his designs, and angered at his ill success, he began to lay about him with violence, leading some astray, and pulling down others at every attempt to rise. [illegible]

Soon he himself began to slip and slide down the rough and perilous sides of the hill, now regaining his foothold for a little, then losing it again, until he tumbled and fell headlong down, down into a black and yawning gulf at the base. At this, I woke in distress, and was glad enough to find that it was only a dream. Now, you may make as much or as little of this as you please; I think the disturbed state of our country, along with my own indifferent health, must have occasioned it. A letter from his mother, to-day, assures me that her little Aaron is a lively, prattle some fellow, filling his parents' hearts with joy.

Your loving sister, SARAH.

Though "only a dream," this vision of the night prefigured a sad reality, and the first incidents of the mournful history quickly came to pass. A memorandum of September 30, 1757, records the death of President Burr—one of the "guides"—the previous week, and under date of Philadelphia, September 22, 1758, is this entry in the diary:

"Arrived here yesterday, to take charge of my dear Esther's children, who have been in this city since their mother's death. We shall return in a few days to Princeton. Sad as it is to see my household rent and broken, God still lives, and he has my whole heart."

Only two years after the dream, and both "guides" gone! How faithful the rest of the dream is fulfilled is a matter of history.

Modern Melodrama.

From the Philadelphia Herald.

Yesterday morning between twelve and one o'clock a private watchman of a warehouse opposite the second dock above Walnut street, noticed two young men and a young woman walk solemnly out upon the pier, and there stand as if in the most earnest consultation. Their actions he thought suspicious, so that he crept close to them to see what they might do. The conversation was carried on in very low tones, so that he could hear nothing, till at last the young men in turn kissed the young woman—there was a melodramatic farewell—and then a splash in the water.

The young woman had divested herself of bonnet, shawl, and perhaps of waterfall, and plunged into the river. The young men stood idly upon the pier gazing down on the gloomy waters, and made no attempt to save her. This was thrillingly strange to the watchman lying perdu. He lost no time in rushing to the wharf and jumping overboard after she would be suicide. She made no resistance to the watchman, and by the aid of a plank and a rope or two from vessels lying near by, both were safely on terra firma, very wet. In the excitement, the two young men disappeared, but were subsequently apprehended and confined in the Harbor Police Station for the balance of the night. Through the intercession of the young lady they were released.

The young woman was very reticent, and refused to give any other name than Jennie. It is supposed that she resides somewhere in the neighborhood of Currant Alley. From what few admissions she made to Lieutenant Edgar, commanding the Harbor Patrol, it would seem, that the young man were lovers of such exceeding fine parts that she could not decide between them. They began to look upon each other with murderous eyes, so that to save bloodshed and crime she determined to destroy herself, that all cause of contention might be removed. This is a strange tale, one that the pressle reporter is rarely called upon to write, but it is "every true."

New York Through Japanned Eyes.

Correspondence of the Yeddo Bankok Shin Bun Shi.

NEW YORK, May 26, 1867.

DEAR SHIN-BAN:—I take my pencil in hand to India ink you in low Dutch my first letter from the great Yeddow of the Yankees of New York. It is a feast to-day and our troupe can rest their sole. As I write I hear the bells of the different temples peling, and the streets are crowded with Yankees going to their sacrifices. The women are allowed to accompany the men, for such is the custom in this strange land. Yet they go in fear and trembling for the most of them are clutching the arms of their men lest they should run away. Think of a native of Nipon allowing his Japonica to have such a grip on him.

The costumes of these females are peculiar. They all wear long tunics of silk and satin, and beneath these garments (I am told) they wear small cages, called in the dialect of the land, du piex ellipticle. These cages hang in the windows of many bazars and have a great sale. As they are always changing in shape—either expanding or contracting—they are bought new each month. The old ones strew the highways, and are used for mending their roads. They accumulate so rapidly that carts go about the streets gathering them up, hoisted by a man with a bell. He hurles them in a spot set aside for the skeletons of females. In other lands, dear Shin Bun, gay plumage is generally seen within cages, here the order of things are reversed, and the fine feathers hide these wires.

Anotha peculiarity strikes me. These females, without exception, from the age of 16 to 50, are cursed with huge tumors. These tumors, strange to say, in the lower class grow on the back of the head. They are skillfully covered with human hair brought from the Paris hospitals. They are called "chignons," or "waterfalls." They are epidemical just now, but it is supposed that the disease has now reached its highest point and that it will make no further headway.

Tod dy No-Kami, one of our troupe, was so impertinent as to examine one of them with a powerful glass. He was sick for several days after, and the sight of one for a long time, threw him into convulsions. Nor will Tod dy tell us how it looked. He says he hopes that the little bits of plaster which they wear on them, called bonnets, will cure them soon.

The Dandy, a species of Yankee, affords us no end of amusement, and I should like to bring home to the "kingdom of origin of the sun" one of these original sons.

He wears, invariably, windows to his eyes, connected by a little bridge that rests on his nose. His legs by some process have had the flesh taken off of them, and the bones encased in snug links like Yeddo sausages, look no bigger than his arms. He wears a loose but very short tunic, generally of blue, and his hands are dyed yellow or purple, just as he may wish. He never shaves his upper lip, and wears two tails at his nostrils, which, I am told, it takes him the better part of the morning to curl.

Those people travel in junks on wheels, called omnibuses. They are drawn by aged horses only, and are driven by Yankees selected from the most ferocious tribe. The driver is fastened to his seat, which is on the top, by a leather strap running along the roof and secured to the door. People, when they wish to get out of these junks on wheels, commence to annoy the driver by pulling this strap. At first he seems not to care, but, by jerking it unceasingly for an hour, he generally gives in and lets them out where the mud is the softest for their corns, but this depends much upon whether he is racing or not.

To protect old men from the barbarities of the ferocious driver, by way of experiment, a bridge has recently been built over their great thoroughfare, Broadway. We have visited it, and from its heights dear Shin Bun a fine panorama is to be seen. On one side ticks a watch, its on the temple of St. Paul, on the other, a street leading to the Brooklyn ferry. Across this street hangs a fine American flag, with the motto of the country attached to it—"Strawberry short-cake every day." This is a great city for banners, and I have seen many old men who spend the whole day on Broadway with them on their shoulders. One of them has a singular legend on it, which I send for the historical society of Yeddo to interpret. Here it is—"St—1509—X."

From this bridge I had pointed out to me the New York Herald Institute a new building, to make way for which, I am informed, a hospital for foreign animals was made a burnum fire of. The New York Herald is the Bun kok shin bun shi of America. It is edited by 500 Irish servant girls, who each write a few lines for it every day. Their contributions always commence with the salutation, "Wanted," and fill half the paper.

Animals have a good time of it here in this city. We sent little "All Right"—that is his name among the Yankees now—over to Jersey, a foreign country, to get us some fresh snakes to fry, a dish we had not tasted since we left Nipon. Coming back to the city, he stopped in the street to skin them before they were dead. He was arrested. We have been notified also that our puppies must not be boiled alive. It's the dogma of the land. And would you believe it, that many of the moneyed men of this city are Bulls and Bears—that their chief officer is a Mare, and that many of his Council are asses—that a company of French calves are now playing a piece called the Black Crook, while at another theatre a horse is making a "four legged for tune."

Our performances met with much favor, and I may soon return to Yeddo with gold enough to buy me a Tycoonship or some other high office. The press speaks daily of our great feats, which is enough to make a citizen of Nipon commit hari kari at once; for we pride ourselves on our feats as our sole beauty.

I must confess that our music doesn't please them, and a musical critic told me that he preferred tin pans to Japans. But I must bring my letter to a close, as the old No Kami So so dont has bid me cut his corns at once.

Yours, by my sacred pigtail,
CON KI YI SKAT.

A Strange Adventure on the Part of a Young Lady.

From the Detroit Advertiser, Sept. 2d.

A few days since a woman went to East Saginaw, in this State, and issued handbills announcing that Mlle. Ellarena Shoudon would walk a rope stretched across Genesee street, at 6 o'clock p. m., Tuesday. A great crowd assembled, but for some reason she failed to walk, postponing it until the next day. At the appointed hour about 2,000 people assembled to witness the performance. The lady appeared in robe de ballet, but seemed very timid, and after a while, seeing her awkwardness, the authorities interposed and stopped the performance. On Thursday an old gentleman came to town in a state of great excitement inquiring for a missing daughter who answered the description of the rope-walker, and stated she had left home suddenly a few days previous, and that her people feared foul play. The father, who is well known to parties in this city, is a wealthy business man residing in Flint. The young lady is 24 years old, is handsome, and engaged to be married to a wealthy Eastern man soon and moves in the best circles of society. She has never walked a rope before, and what induced her to undertake such a rash adventure is beyond conception. She was induced to go home by a party who was acquainted with her father and family, and started about an hour before her father came.

Reverses.

Burleigh" writes from New York to the Boston Journal:

Leaning on the granite pillar of one of our hotels yesterday I saw a well dressed young man, not over thirty, he was very drunk. His friends, some of them among our most respectable citizens, were trying to induce him to go home.—Not lost to all self-respect he said, "I am drunk—I won't go home." Two months ago he was reputed to be rich. His balance over in the bank was large. He could any day draw his check for $50,000. One of the sudden blows that upset the staunchest craft struck him—he took to the bottle, and his end is easily predicted.

One can count on his ten fingers the New York business men who for thirty years have had an uninterrupted success. But New York is full of wrecks of men who, because they would not pay their notes, have flung away character, talent and all. In one of the tenement houses in this city dwells a woman, one who since I have been your correspondent, was a belle at Saratoga. Her story is the old one—business reverses—the bottle—poverty and woe. On the floor of one of the most crowded tenement houses, covered with rags, the husband of this lady, was found by a noble hearted man who sought him out to save him if possible. And yet a few years ago he was one of our brightest merchants.

The American Cooking Stove.

After twenty years Experience in the manufacture of stoves, we became convinced, respecting them alone, that a vast amount of money was being expended by the people of this country, in buying cheap and almost worthless stoves, a large portion of which was wasted, and that true economy consists in buying the best stoves that could be made, notwithstanding the price was higher. With this view we proceeded to construct the American Cooking Stove, and spared no pains or expense to make it the best and most perfect stove that could be made. Also we have experimented with it, and carefully watched its operation for the last six years, and when an improvement suggested itself, we have at once adopted it, and we have several of these improvements secured by letters patent. In this manner we do not hesitate to say, we have brought it to a higher state of perfection than has hitherto been attained in cooking stoves. The recent improvements in this stove has added largely to its convenience and effectiveness. In all the varieties of stoves we manufacture, we study usefulness, durability, convenience and economy in operation, rather than attention in price, and in so doing we are satisfied we study the interests of those purchasing our stoves.

WASHINGTON Sept 7

The Intelligencer says During the deliberations of the Cabinet yesterday, it is understood, it became evident that in the opinion of every member present, the legal effect of the contemplated amnesty proclamation would be to relieve all persons included within its terms from all disqualifications as well as all penalties incurred by complicity in the late rebellion and of course so far as the action of General Grant is concerned, from all disability as to the right of suffrage in consequence

Because of a clerical error in the public debt statement, referred to in the dispatches published this morning, the Secretary of the Treasury has decided to make out a new and correct statement to which it will be found he has added a report of the condition of the public debt on the first of September 1867 which compared with the statement of September 1867, will show a reduction in the debt of $25 906,206 38.

OFFICE AT THE RED PLANEING MILL

Heretofore we have in our circulars, alluded to a series of experiments being made with Nitro Glycerine and other explosives. We now announce that we have succeeded, even beyond our most sanguine expectations, as regards the safety of handling, also the unprecedented force and power manifested by a skillful combination wherein the use of the Torpedo is dispensed with and the force in many cases multiplied, and are now prepared to operate on wells with any of the above named explosives—either with our improved combination or our old Combination Torpedo, which has a record of utility too well known to need mention here.
